

DepEd to revise guidelines for class suspension

THE DEPARTMENT of Education (DepEd) is planning to revise its current protocol on typhoon-related class suspensions and include in it areas where more localized rains and flooding would disrupt classes, Education Secretary Armin Luistro said.

Luistro said the department is studying how to expand the protocol to cover weather disturbances even in the absence of storm signals, as have happened many times last year around Marikina and in coastal provinces.

"We are planning to revise some because of rain. Our current protocol is cancelling classes if really more about typhoons," Luistro said yesterday.

"A lot of our experience in the past year are localized floods. In fact, we should include rainfall and flooding in our protocol," he also said.

The DepEd has, over suspended classes to consider regions after severe rains and flooding, among them in provinces in Mindanao and the Bicol region.

Based on DepEd's current system, classes in private and public schools or kindergartens are automatically suspended in areas where typhoon signal No. 1 is issued.

Classes up to all levels of basic education—basic pre-school through high school—are also automatically suspended in areas under typhoon signal No. 2 or higher. —Sara Dela Cruz

Diamond Peel: The Celeb's secret to fresh and radiant skin

Do you often wonder how celebrities are able to have the kind of skin most people dream of having—smooth, radiant, flawless?

Their secret? Diamond Peel.

Diamond peel is a non-invasive microdermabrasion treatment that uses a special diamond dust control wand and suction technology to exfoliate and lift and slough off dead skin and stimulate the growth of new, healthy cells, which results in healthy, glowing skin.

It is exactly why celebrities like Amanda Griffin-Jacob, Anne Curtis, and Bianca Amante-Ducado consider it one of their favorite skin treatments at Facial Care Centre.

Here's what they have to say:

"Living up with the busy life of a night time radio host and actress is not easy. Since getting the Diamond Peel, my skin definitely looks fresher. So, the treatment takes off dead skin, which is why the face instantly looks brighter. I have one treatment a week. I would recommend it for anyone who wants to look like a star. Diamond Peel would definitely be it."

Amanda Griffin-Jacob, Host

"I consider the Diamond Peel one of my favorite treatments when it comes to skin care. It really has a nice therapeutic feeling. All the very small dead skin cells are removed and a new layer of skin is revealed."

Anne Curtis, Actress

"I really like the Diamond Peel because every time I get it, my skin looks so good. It really has a nice therapeutic feeling. All the very small dead skin cells are removed and a new layer of skin is revealed."

Bianca Amante-Ducado, Actress

 Chapter 120

FIFTH EDITION

RESOLUTION

On 12 April 2006, during the commencement of Kauffman's presentation of evidence, Assistant Missouri Attorney General Todd Smith was sworn and sworn questions were then given to Smith in public and a request for testimony. In view of the Kauffman's medical history as known to Kauffman, the first round, in open court, as Kauffman was testifying, the Kauffman's presentation of evidence was given during a period of three (3) days within which to submit a formal offer of documentary evidence and other evidence. The Kauffman's were likewise directed to present a formal offer within three (3) days from receipt of the initial offer, and then Kauffman, the Kauffman's, had to be sworn and testimony was given.

(Deliberately, in the "Opportunity to be Heard" Motion for reconsideration dated May 6, 2009¹⁰) assert that plaintiff's request to place additional funds for the operation of witnesses and additional evidence must be denied by the court, that this Court rejected the presentation of plaintiff's evidence as sufficient of reasonable proofs; that plaintiff has not asserted in her pleadings to obtain the testimony of additional witnesses who have already been previously subpoenaed but have not showed up to court; and, that plaintiff has not date to re-submit the same

[illegible]

(1) During the 22 April 2009 hearing, Jeffrey Thompson testified to provide the address for counsel proposed for (2) "ADMINISTRATIVE AND LEGAL" and "MOTION FOR PERMANENT AND DISMISSIVE AND ADMINISTRATIVE" relief, as orally stated upon its both parties. This prompted the Court to instruct plaintiff's presentation of evidence and all the presentation of defendant's evidence on July 7, 8, 10 and 16, 2009.¹⁷

In the present motion of the defendants praying that plaintiff be ordered to conclude the presentation of its evidence, this would be the third time that this Court will rule on a similar matter. The Court has filed three motions on the matter – see Proctor & Kitchen v. Ralston, dated 27 March 2008,¹² this Court dated defendants' motion. Again, on 2 December 2008, counsel for the defendants Lacio Tan, et al., Atty. Ertelito Mercedes, again made an oral motion to order the plaintiff to conclude the presentation of its evidence. The motion was again denied by this Court in a Minute Resolution dated 10 January 2009.¹³

Article 19, No. 1 of the Copyright Law of 1992 states that all subjects shall have the right to equally demand of their own before all judicial state entities – administrative bodies. The constitutional right to a speedy disposition of cases is also guaranteed by the second sentence of Article 47 of the Basic Law. The right to a speedy disposition of cases is to be understood in the context of the administrative cases and in all proceedings, including judicial and extra-judicial proceedings. Hence, under this provision, any party to a case may demand immediate action from the state organs concerned with the administration of justice.¹ It is important to note that although the right to a speedy disposition of cases is not a subjective right, it is not a mere right to be heard. One must not pass to the state and to its institutions without controlling such task. The right to a speedy disposition of a case, like the right to be heard, is focused entirely only when the proceedings are delayed by mistake, omission, and oppression. Thus, it is not controlled by the content of the trial, but only to the extent that the delay is caused by fault of the state.² The right to a speedy trial is observed in cases involving the state bodies (also since 1987)³ like the constitutional provision of "specie tria" (specie disposition cases) in a British context. It is consistent with Article 47 and thereby also the constitutional right that the Constitutional Tribunal may review the constitutionality of laws and administrative acts and the regulatory⁴ in the law from the provisions of this law that plaintiff has displayed a latent and latitudinal attitude towards it. In any proceeding and process its evidence and/or testimony

Given the fact that the plaintiff's repeated requests for postjudgment costs and for the issuance of subpoenas to witnesses who cannot be served and/or who refuse to receive such subpoenas, clearly underscoring defendants' right to a speedy disposition of this case. Most importantly, it clearly appears from the record that plaintiff had already established a pattern of non-compliance with the court's orders of the hearings on the ground that witnesses are not available, despite the several warnings that Court has made with respect to this. As the last order has shown, it is the duty of the parties to produce witnesses. The Court of the Court is granting, notwithstanding the fact that the Court has found that the plaintiff's cost must likely remain to be settled, judgments on the hearings due to the fact of non-compliance with the Court's orders.

Although the Court is of the mind that plaintiffs own the economic interest in their properties situated in the Wilson region and to protect the interest of the people through policy of compensation of freezing of assets or economic, this measure should not reduce the light of individualism is quickly lost and disappears if this case. The Court's reason for this is that the plaintiff is present all at all times. There is no a priori value, the case should be put to rest and not be discussed longer as it should not be and should not.

PH to drill for oil in disputed seas

THE PHILIPPINES is set to pursue oil exploration in disputed waters of the South China Sea, a move that has drawn the ire of China, the government said.

British-based Petron Energy said in a statement that it had completed a seismic survey on the Pangasinan Sea Field off the Luzon Strait, which is rich in oil and gas.

"The company will immediately begin processing the data with the aim of better understanding the commercial potential of the field, and to help identify the best locations for possible oil and gas development," it said.

Petron Energy executive John P. Pineda said, "We have never met our oil and gas commitments with the Philippines Department of Energy under former President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo."

Added to that is the country's weak plan, Energy Undersecretary Ramon Alonzo said. "We need to do more."

China reiterated its claim over disputed islands in the South China Sea two weeks ago after both the Philippines and Taiwan passed a law giving it more authority in the disputed waters.

China holds indisputable sovereignty over the South China Sea islands and their adjacent waters," foreign ministry spokesman Jiang Yitai reported in Beijing on March 5.

The Philippines signed a complete oil and gas law in 2001, but it was not until March 2009 that the country passed the law.

The law states that the country's oil and gas resources are the property of the state, and that the state has the right to explore and exploit them.

It also states that the state has the right to enter into agreements with foreign companies to explore and exploit the country's oil and gas resources.

Philippines officials said the law was already included in the 2009 budget and would be signed by the president.

LETTERS

TO THE EDITOR: I am writing to you regarding the recent article in the Inquirer about the high cost of graduation activities. As a parent, I am concerned about the financial burden this places on families. The article mentions that the average cost of a graduation ceremony is around P10,000. This is a significant amount, especially for middle-class families. I believe that schools should focus on providing quality education and character building activities instead of expensive graduation ceremonies. The values taught in school, such as honesty, hard work, and respect, are more important than any ceremony. I hope the school administration can consider this feedback and find ways to reduce the costs of graduation activities.

PH Azkals settle for second draw

By Crabb P. Topo
 MANILA—The Philippines, defending valiantly against a tall, physical Palestine team, settled for a second draw Wednesday, leaving the Azkals with no chance to go all the way to their last group qualifying match in the AFC Challenge Cup.

Lacking the quality to finish several chances, the Azkals, acid-driven from the Bosnian fans, walked away from the Thumamah Stadium with a bitter taste after frustrating the crowd and spectators. Palestine is a very good player, mostly in the field. It was noticeable, however, that the Azkals also during their game Monday.

Yemeni president warns of civil war

SANAA—Yemen's US-backed president, Ali Abdullah Saleh, has issued a warning about the possibility of civil war in the country, saying that the country could turn into a "barrage" if the opposition forces are not stopped by the end of the year.

Yemen's thousands of protesters in the capital Sana'a have been demanding his resignation, emboldened by uprisings in neighboring countries.

Ali Abdullah Saleh's warning on Tuesday reflected his determination to cling to power and prevent the country from being pulled into even greater instability by a potentially explosive split, said leaders of the military have demanded that the capital Sana'a—where most of the protests are taking place—be put under a military curfew, and urged that a new constitution be drafted, and that the president be removed from office.

The defiance on Monday of that commander, Maj. Gen. Ali Mohsen al-Ahmar, a powerful regime leader who commands the Army's 1st Armored Division, has been seen by many as a major turning point toward a potentially rapid end for Saleh's rule.

The question is whether the internal chaos of the uprising, sweeping the Middle East, will end there, like Libya—where the resignation of President Muammar Gaddafi on the country as a relatively stable, if still uncertain, new normal, democracy—or the Libya, which has seen brutal fighting between armed groups.

Already, clashes broke out last Monday between Saleh's Republican Guard and dissident Army units in the far western corner of the country, the town of Marib. The Republican Guard units surrounded a city air base in the western Red Sea coastal city of Hodeida after its commander, Col. Ahmed al-Hakham, a member of Saleh's clan, refused to be released to the opposition.

The national armed forces in Washington, which have heavily backed Saleh to wage a campaign against a major Western-led al-Qaida war that also includes the United States.

US Defense Secretary Robert Gates, on a trip to Sana'a, on Tuesday said the "escalation and division of interests" from dealing with al-Qaida is a "primary concern about the situation."

His refusal to weigh in on whether Saleh should step down.

After a month of street protests, led mainly by students and professionals who were against his nearly 32-year rule, Saleh became dramatically more isolated after an early-term special election that saw more than 100 demonstrations on Friday.

The killings are all an outgrowth of defiance by protesters in his ruling party, influence of tribal leaders and, most damaging, of al-Qaida and a rising of other regional groups.

In a meeting on Tuesday with his top military commanders, Saleh said that the dissidents, calling them "mad," and saying they

"dropped away like autumn leaves."

"Those who want to climb to power through a coup should know that things won't be stable. The nation won't be stable. It will turn into a civil war, as it already was, as they should think carefully," he said.

In the same time, he issued a letter statement, saying he "sympathizes with the youth" and calling on protesters to return to a dialogue. He said he would leave his movement could "leave the democratic movement" in the country.

Monday night, Saleh pledged in a meeting with senior officials, military commanders and tribal leaders that he would step down by the end of the year, according to a presidential spokesman. Ahmed al-Hadi, which had earlier rejected such a proposal, making a more limited concession of promising not to run for reelection when his term ends in 2013.

But the opposition said the new offer was too little, too late.

"The president's statements are just empty political promises and don't represent the people's demands," said opposition spokesman Mohammed al-Hadi. "When we completely believe that it is not acceptable for today."

Fire razes interior ministry building in Egypt as police protest

CAIRO—Fire tore through a seven-story interior ministry building in central Cairo on Tuesday during demonstrations by Egyptian policemen seeking better pay and working conditions.

A ministry source said the fire was probably linked to the demonstrations, without elaborating.

Police union leaders said the protest had been peaceful and accused the officers of using the protest as an excuse to burn government buildings.

Protesters and at least five fire engines took to the burning building, part of the interior ministry headquarters compound in central Cairo. There were reports of casualties.

"It is likely to be related to the protest," an interior ministry source said from a Sana'a office, and a television channel linked up with the center of the city.

But another ministry official said later on Tuesday that the fire was not related to the protest.

"They haven't done anything, and we haven't arrested anyone," Egyptian radio deputy news anchor Mohamed El-Sayed told a TV show.

Protesters have staged similar strikes and protests since President Hosni Mubarak was toppled, and last month about six vehicles were set on fire outside the same compound.

Egypt's military rules are based on the Egyptian constitution, which prohibits demonstrating in front of the military.

The military ordered off the building grounds on Tuesday as protesters in front of the police premises, the main news agency reported. Protesters at about 1,000.

A number of other security buildings were set on fire on Tuesday, and witnesses at the time said police had been burning some documents that could incriminate security officials.

Police also burned protest signs for the first time.

"This is a major step," the paper said, saying that the police had not just been

"protest," said Mohamed Abdel Salam, a witness who said he had been standing in front of the building at the time.

"There are moments of tension during the protest to burn their papers."

Gen. Mohamed Morsi, an officer witness, said "I saw the protesters, they were burning peacefully. Nobody was doing anything and all of a sudden I saw explosion of fire at the end."

The protesters on Tuesday had held their signs reading

"Where is social justice for policemen?" and "We want the revolution of military trials," referring to the fact that they will be prosecuted for police involvement under Mubarak.

Interior Minister Mohamed El-Shenawy was appointed as part of a cabinet reshuffle that purged remaining members of Mubarak's administration.

EU offers Bahrain mediation

BRUSSELS—Top EU foreign affairs officials on Tuesday showed clearly to Bahraini leaders that the EU is not just a mediator but also a mediator with teeth.

"It would be a surprise to see the EU become a mediator," said a senior EU official on Tuesday.

EU officials have been working to mediate between Bahraini and Iranian officials, but the EU has not been able to do so.

BUSINESSRigorous screening urged for PPP project proposals

Project viability seen as a major issue

By Geomil Lujan

THE GOVERNMENT has been urged to use a more rigorous assessment process for assessing big-ticket projects that it would like to provide incentives under the Public-Private Partnership (PPP) program.

The suggestion was made yesterday by President Lee and Vice President Jejomar Binay (Senate) as they asked the Monitoring and Evaluation Committee and Development Authority to subject proposed infrastructure projects to a process that would ensure prospective funders of these viability.

In a statement, the think tank said that "other than the small rhetoric about PPP, concerned public officials should convince the public and would be investors that they have these things because well be being able to all project proposals have passed certain types of evaluation."

Business Solutions Fund Alliance Asia pointed out that only such a public disclosure about the government's official commitment would prove that these projects pushed by President Aquino and his cabinet are not just policy but "based on solid foundations and not politics."

The comments came on the heels of the Palace's recent launching of infrastructure projects that it would initially offer to private investors for joint undertaking, from infrastructure for less than a hundred projects listed as for possible PPP funding.

These were the P1.5 billion North Luzon

Expressway, South Luzon Expressway extension road, the CTA-DOH Metro Agaña International Airport, Expressway Phase 2, the P7.7-billion Light Rail Transit Line 1, P6.5-billion Metro Rail Transit Line 3, and the P1.6-billion Baguio Road Link and Expressway Link road.

Agas urged the administration to review and approve PPP projects on the following criteria: 1) a needs analysis, which defines the government's goal; 2) an affordability assessment; 3) a value-for-money assessment; 4) preliminary risk assessment; 5) a stakeholder assessment, which identifies the stakeholders, supporters and opponents; 6) environmental and business case assessment; 7) a "bankability" assessment covering the financing aspect; 8) a legal liability assessment; 9) market testing; 10) a PPP option assessment, to find out the best or appropriate PPP option; 11) a build-operate-transfer or any of its variants, joint venture, concession, lease, service contract, management contract or disposition, among others; and 12) an inclusive consultation implementation plan, which specifies the government's role, and detailed implementation plan.

"Going to what our officials are saying, PPP is not that simple," Agas said. "It is not a walk in the park. PPP involves a wide range of difficult decisions, and so the public has not to know if real policy makers have been made and when the decision supporting these decisions were, if there are any."

A passion for delivering more value.

For the Salazar family, the complete package—crispy pork 'adobo' . . .

pork and the spicy sauce," says Salazar, who runs Cat Printing, a digital printing business that makes brochures, menus, calendars, planners, postcards, including photo albums and books of families with business topics.

Cheep yet healthy

Preparing the crispy adobo meat gently infused with adobo sauce is similar to eating meat paired with a generous help of creamy gravy—cheap but down-right healthy in taste and food.

To create a full-scale adobo experience, Salazar prepares part of the meat and sauce to whip up adobo rice sprinkled with loads of golden fried garlic.

After frying the rice in oil and garlic, she pours in a few tablespoons of adobo sauce into the rice and drags this strip of adobo meat around.

"I have owned this kind of adobo in my pantry and it's always a hit," says Salazar, a Pinoy who graduated at the Academy of the Holy Spirit in San Francisco.

Salazar, however, admits to have the pork cut a bit bigger because it divides when fried, the huge hot lamps at Salazar's and Cash & Carry "because they are cut the most evenly."

She prepares the sauce in a large pot, the sauce on a stove, garlic, onion and the rice in a deep fryer. She actually serves adobo with green mangoes during and after dinner.

Adobo is not a wonder in the kitchen. In fact, she and her eight other siblings (four girls and five boys) were already helping in the kitchen while growing up. They were "used" to seeing their mothers in the cooking preparation on weekdays.

CREPT Adobo with Adobo Rice

"All of us were trained to cook by our moms (who's mom 'Pa' says 'Mama') Salazar says. "We used to prepare a lot because we wanted to keep more than what is in the kitchen. But, our exposure in the happening to the kitchen helped us not when we needed almost. We were as good as 'We have it ready.'"

Crispy Adobo with Adobo Rice

To a pork chops (cut into 1/2 inch), 1/2 inch

- 1/2 cup oil
- 1/2 cup water
- 1 cup brown sugar
- 2 cups beer
- 1 cup pepper
- 1 head small garlic, crushed for adobo
- 1 head small garlic, crushed for adobo rice
- 1 cup cooking oil for frying

Put all the ingredients together in a pot, add water and let them boil. When boiling, lower the heat and cook till most of the liquid is gone. Remove meat from the pot, drain and set aside. Pour oil into the chicken liver and return to the pot. Add oil and let it cook. Meanwhile, deep-fry the pork in oil until crispy, but do not overcook. Remove from oil and drain.

Drain the pork meat only on a plate with the adobo sauce and adobo rice.

To make adobo rice, take part of the oil used in frying the pork and cook garlic oil. Add the cooked rice and mix about 1/4 cup of the adobo sauce into the rice and add strips of fried adobo pork.
